The hope, among the politicians and among the civil servants in Brussels, is that at least some elements of the compromise proposed by Mr. Mitterrand can be salvaged a basis for a new package.

Paradoxically, the breakdown came at a time when West Europe an leaders, including Mrs. Thatcher, are more convinced than ever that they cannot solve their problems alone, at a time when those problems are worse than in years and at a time when faith in the United States is at a low point.

Reagan, Senate Compromise on Salvador

By Martin Tolchin

New York Times Service WASHINGTON - The White House has agreed to a bipartisan Senate compromise that would reduce an emergency aid package to El Salvador by one-third and delay a vote until after the Salvadoran presidential election Sunday.

After a day of negotiations, the greement was announced on the Senate floor by Senator Howard H. Baker Jr., Republican of Tennessee, the majority leader.

The compromise, proposed by Senator Daniel K. Inouye, Democrat of Hawaii, and approved by the Senate Republican leadership, provided for a reduction from the $93 million requested by the administration to $61.75 million. Of this amount, $47 million was earmarked for military aid and the rest for medical supplies.

"I have taken this matter up with the administration, the secretary of state and the White House," Mr. Baker said. "I believe we can work out an agreement on this basis so that the administration supports that funding level."

The Salvadoran aid package is-part of an emergency funding bill that also includes $21 million for insurgents lighting the Sandinist government in Nicaragua.

Of that amonnt, $7 million would be available immediately. and $14 million would be left for contingencies and disbursed in accordance with the wishes of the House and Senate intelligence committees.

Also included are funds for nations in Africa that have been severely affected by drought.

The White House and Senate Republicans sought a vote on Cen-tral American aid this week to demonstrate support for the Salvadoran government. The vote was blocked by Democrats, who warned against intervening in the

Washington Pass Service BAGHDAD - The Soviet Union has agreed to build Iraq's first nuclear power plant, a com-mitment that underscores Moscow's new desire to strengthen relations with President Saddam Hussein's government after a peri-

Baghdad. The nuclear-power project is perceived by diplomats here as per-haps the signal for improved relations between Iraq and the Soviet Union, after years of distrust caused by Moscow's efforts to seek favor with Iran. The Soviet-built reactor will be hraq's first for purposes of machear power production. A French research reactor was destroyed in an Israeb air attack on June 7, 1981, and is reportedly beyond repair. French sources here have said bule about the status of the facility, but Italians who also worked on construction of the plant say no repair work is being done.

The latest evidence of revived Soviet influence in Iraq is the intense exchange of military and economic arrangements between the two capitals as the Gulf war, wihch began in September 1981, appears

Any move away from the UN plan could threaten eight years of U.S.-led negotiations toward Namibian self-rule.

At least a dozen major political parties among the one million Namibian people have been meeting on and off for several years to find a way to independence. Most independent observers believe SWAPO would win fair elections.

After the UN secretary-general, Javier Pérez de Cuéllar, visited southern Africa last year, South Africa said the last obstacles to the plan had been overcome, except for the presence of an estimated 25,000 Cuban soldiers in Angola.

South Africa agreed a month ago' to pull its troops out of southern Angola where SWAPO has based its forces. South Africa joined Angola in a commission to monitor the disengagement.

Senate Democrats Offer Plan to Cut U.S. Budget Deficit by $200 Billion

By Helen Dewar Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - Senate Democrats presented a $200-billion deficit-reduction plan for the federal budget that includes a twoyear deferral of indexing incometax rates to inflation.

Over three years, the plan would cut deficits by $53 billion more than a deficit-reduction proposal that President Ronald Reagan negotiated last week with Senate Republicans and by about $15 billion more than an alternative presented this week by Democrats in the House of Representatives.

In the Senate, the Republicans' plan is expected to prevail because they are the majority party.
The main difference between the twn Democratic plans is the call by House Democrats for a deferral of inflation adjustments for income tax rates, scheduled in take effect next year.

Both Mr. Reagan and the House Democrats would raise taxes largely through loophole-closing measures already approved by the tax-writing committees of both bouses. Chiles.

any increase in tax rates, including any change in indexing.

The proliferation of budget plans, each seemingly more ambitious than earlier nnes, points up the anxiety over deficits and the difficulties of reaching agreement

Moreover, there is a procedural snarl in the Senate over a proposed shortcut under which Mr. Reagan's proposed reductions would be enacted as part of a pending deficit-

Some key senators are objecting that the procedure would set a bad precedent and undermine existing committee prerogatives, although leadership sources said the procedural problems probably could be overcome. Substantive problems with Mr. Reagan's plan may be more serious, nne source indicated.

the House Democrats. The Senate Democrats' plan also would raise taxes by $75 billion, or about half again as much as the Republicans and House Democrats are proposing, mainly because of the proposed delay of tax indexing until 1987.

Using Congressional Budget Office estimates, the Senate Democrass contend that their plan would produce a deficit of $174 billion in the 1985 fiscal year, compared with $181 billion for Mr. Reagan's plan and $176 billion for the House Democrats' proposal.

The Complex Impact of Campaign Financing Laws

By Thomas B. Edsall International Herald Tribune

WASHINGTON — The labyrinth of U.S. campaign fi-nance regulations, largely established in the period of post-Watergate reform, has itself become a major factor in American elections.

In the battle between Walter F. Mondale and Senator Gary Hart for the Democratic presidential nomination. federal campaign spending limits may severely restrict the ability of the former vice president to continue the struggle if it extends through the primaries in late May and early June.

At another level, the campaign reforms were intended to eliminate the role of special-interest groups in elections. In fact, however, the legislation provided legal sanction for the creation of political action committees (PACs), which are now the subject of attack by Common Cause, a private organization that lobbies against government abuses.

One of the most significant changes in campaign funding was the establishment of full public financing of presidential elections, a step designed to eliminate any taint of corruption from the election process. But both political parties have taken advantage of loopboles to channel large sums of private cash into presidential elections, creating a new kind of campaign contribution called "soft money."

The major provisions of federal campaign law are as · Candidates running for president can receive partial public financing during the pre-convention phase and full public financing once they receive their party's nomination. Before the conventions, the federal government will match every contribution of $250 or less from an individual to a candidate. In order to qualify, a candidate must first raise $5,000 in each of at least 20 different states, for a minimum total of $100,000, with each of the contributions less that $250. In the general elections, rusjor party nominees receive $40 million from the federal government. • If a presidential candidate accepts public financing, he or she must limit total spending in the primaries and caucuses to about $24.4 million, and to $40 million in the general election. In addition, the candidate must restrict spending within individual states during the primary phase; the limit in New Hampshire was $404,000. The $24.4-million limit on overall pre-convention spend-spent over $17 million through the March 20 Illinois primary on the assumption that the nomination would be settled early. Consequently, he will not be able to match Mr. Hart dollar for dollar if the contest continues into late May and early June.

percent in a subsequent primary. The Rev. Jesse L. Jackson failed to win 10 percent in the New Hampshire and Vermont primaries, but then just went over the 20-percent mark in • Individuals are prohibited from giving any federal candidate more than $1,000 in each election — primary, runoff or general. An individual can, however, give a political party up to $20,000 a year and a PAC up to $5,000 a year.

Altogether, an individual can give a maximum of $25,000 a year to federal candidates, PACs and political parties. For example, it would be possible to give $10,000 to the Democratic or Republican National Committee, $5,000 to a PAC

Since the Republican committees raise more money than they can legally give to candidates, they are able to finance extensive polling, voter registration, issue research and other activities that benefit Republican candidates at all levels. Political action committees first came into being in 1943, when the Congress of Industrial Organizations created a PAC to raise money from members in response to legislation to 1982, the total amount of money contributed in each election cycle by PACs has grown tenfold, from $8.5 million in 1972 to $83.6 million in 1982.

The most rapid growth has been among corporate PACs, which went from 89 in 1974 to 1,467 in 1982. The overall growth in PACs has been the subject of consistent attack by sueb liberal reform groups as Common Cause and Ralph Nader's Congress Watch, prompting both of the leading Democratic candidates to refuse to take PAC contributions.

The re-election committee of President Ronald Reagan and Vice President George Bush, in contrast, solicits PAC All the campaign contributions to candidates, political parties and PACs, along with the expenditures made by them, must be reported to the Federal Election Commission in Washington and to state election boards. There are, however, some major loopholes that dilute both the expenditure limitations and the disclosure requirements. The Supreme Court has ruled, for example, that expenditures made to support or oppose a candidate independent of any candidate's campaign is a form of free speech and, in certain circumstances, cannut be restricted, The PAC best known for this kind of "independent expenditure" is the National Conservative Political Action Committee (NCPAC), which has spent large amounts of money running television commercials attacking bberal Democrats. In 1982, for example, it spent $3.04 million in efforts to persuade voters to defeat such senators as Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, Paul S. Sarbanes of Maryland, Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia and Lloyd M. Bentsen

Another way around the law was created by the approval of a seemingly minor amendment to federal campaign legislation enacted in 1979. The amendment was designed to encourage the growth of state parties, permitting them to spend money on phone soliciting, get-out-the-vote efforts and registration in the general election in support of presidential candidates.

In 1980, the Reagan campaign used this provision to raise an estimated $10 million to $15 million in private money during the general election on top of public financing from the federal government. The private money was transferred to state party organizations, which then used it in support of

The political umbrella organiza-tion that General Jaruzelski set up in the first year of martial law to serve as a forum for public dialogue with the authorities has not attracted a single notable enthusiast. The new trade unions, established after Solidarity was dissolved by the government, are still viewed suspiciously by many workers as instru-ments of the state, although some union groups have reportedly been making tough wage and price denands on the authorities

A ranking party official said with exceptional frankness: "Jaruzelski's policies have been less successful than anticipated. There has not been the major reorientation of public attitudes that was expected two years ago. The political underground has been demoralized, but you'd have to say that in three main constituencies, industrial workers, intellectuals and students, the situation looks rather unchanged.

"Jaruzelski hasn't lost any promment supporters," the official con-tinued. "But he hasn't gained any, either. The political division in society has stagnated.

"This gives the hard-line faction ammunition to argue it's time their methods were adopted after all. I'm not sure the core of hard-line critics is any larger than before, but I do think there are more in the middle who are willing to listen to them."

PARIS — Four 16th-century Turkish miniatures, removed around 1939 from a volume of "Siyar-i-Nabī" (The Life of the Prophet), dated 1594, were sold for 1,372,000 frames ($171,000) at Drouot on Chloe's owners certainly tried. They hired Elizabeth Attali, wife of Jacques Attali, the special adviser to President François Mitterrand of France, as their public-relations official. Jean-Louis Scherrer, who is no innovator but has established his own elegant style, was a bit over-lonked because of all the razzmatazz. Yet, this was one of the most solid offerings in Paris this week, especially the evening wear, which was comparable to Scherrer's couture, except for the choice of fabrics. The evening sweaters were elegant and draped over the hips, as were the long-waisted, ankle-length evening gowns worn under Christmasey hooded velvet capes.

But it did pave the way Inr Albertn Giacometti, represented by an abstract marble carving, "Caresse," done in 1932. The smallish piece is not what most buyers expect of Giacometri: the flattish pebble-like shape with two geometrie identations in front is engraved with a human hand. At 577,000 francs, the price was high - which did not stop the Pompi-dou Museum of Cootempory Art from getting it. Enthusiasm rose further with Zadkine, whose lifesize "Venus Cariatide" of 1919 went up to 610,000 francs.

Mysteriously ennugh, buyers then went mad about an oval table with cast-bronze rugged legs by Diego Giacometti, which sold for 166,000 francs, although several examples must be around. Yet, buyers were ungenerous to a plas-ter bas-relief of "Two Women" by Henri Laurens that was hardly overpaid at 53,000 francs, Perhaps, again, the contrast with the previous piece threw everything out of perspective

But this was nothing compared with the jolts when it came to paintings. The order of the catalog did not seem to follow any pattern. Speciators rallied at a more-familiar sight, a small landscape by Corot that is not his greatest butthat brought 497,000 francs, a substantial price. This, however, was peanuts compared with the 331,500. francs offered for the worst Derain that I remember seeing. Therewere one or two other grotesquely high prices for bad paintings and a bid of 806,000 francs for a Rouault portrait. Then, after an unrelated abstract composition by Poliakoff sold cheaply at 68,500 francs, came the equally far-removed landscape by Louis Valtat, "Femme sur la Falaise."

Once again, the catalog was uninformative, with the expert mentioning orally what should have gone into print — that it had been done "about 1905." This is Valtat's best period, when he painted in broad short strokes, halfway between Neo-Impressionism and Fauve painting. At 119,200 francs the landscape was proportionately as clever a buy as Camoin's Corsican landscape. The young French dealer who got it may be able to resell it at double the price in

The "Mondrian" that Harvey Tulcensky, an artist who is employed as an art-handler at the museum, painted in eight hours one Sunday not long ago is part of a juggling act that the museum is performing to redesign its house. ## Thatcher and the Miners

The British miners' strike is a great deal more than merely another quarrel in a country with bad labor relations. It is a deliberate collision between the most rigorously conservative British government of this century and a union leadership that is radical in an altogether serious and Marxist sense. The origins of the conflict lie in the early 1970s when a previous Conservative government, uoder Edward

Heath, was destroyed by the miners' union. Then the government was trying to enforce a new labor law, and the unions marked him as an enemy. During the oil crisis of 1973-74 the miners seized their moment and, to press their wage demands, resorted to a slowdown that rapidly had British industry on a three-day week amid pervasive power shortages. Mr. Heath responded by calling elections, and lost. The incoming Labor government yielded to the miners, and within a year the annual inflation rate was approaching 30 percent.

One consequence was that the Conservative Party replaced Mr. Heath with a more combative and less flexible leader, Margaret Thatcher. Another was that many voters, including union members, began to be genuinely fright-ened by inflation, the continuing leftward drift of some union officials, their revolutionary rhetoric and the inability of the Labor government to cope with any of it. The next elections made Mrs. Thatcher prime minister.

There is an impression in America that she was elected in a rebellion against the welfare state. That is incorrect. Her government has hardly laid a hand on the structure of the welfare state. But the jousting between her and the unions - particularly those in the nationalized heavy industries - has been continuous. Things now seem to be moving toward a sorting out of substantial dimensions.

Mrs. Thatcher seems to be in the stronger position at the moment. The union is striking to prevent the government from closing several disastrously unprofitable mines. That is not a very persuasive cause even within the union. The head of the union, Arthur Scargill, twice called strike votes and both times failed to get the occessary majority. Now he has proceeded to strike without wasting any more time on democratic niceties, and there is a row within the union over his right to do it. Meanwhile, in violation of law, he is using flying squads of his supporters to picket those mines where his members are cootinuing to work.

Both Mrs. Thatcher and the labor radicals represent a style of politics that is highly polarized, ideological and, by any previous stan-dard, un-British. The creation of each extreme owes much to the other. The outcome of the strike may give some indication whether this phase of British politics is going to continue.

UNESCO Feels the Heat

It says oceans about UNESCO that the fire at its Paris headquarters Wednesday raised many eyebrows in Washington. First police reports said that it was arson, that attempts were made to start fires at several places in the building and that classified documents had been destroyed. UNESCO said the next day that only replaceable program documents were lost. Personnel and management records which Washington hopes the U.S. General Accounting Office will soon start sorting through in its investigation of alleged mismanagement, are said to be safe. Fortunately, UNESCO's director-general, Amadou Mahtar M'Bow, who is a principal object of the pending inquiry and who was at his desk when the fire was discovered, got out unscathed.

Mr. M'Bow, however, is feeling heat of another sort. In an unorthodox but effective intervention, a single U.S. congressman, James Scheuer of New York, stood up to him in Paris last month and demanded that be answer to the widespread and persistent suspicions of UNESCO hanky-panky. Mr. Scheuer acted after President Reagan had announced that the United States would withdraw from the organization at the end of 1984 unless it cured its Third World political bias.

So now a GAO investigation of management practices is in the works, congressional hearings are planned and the State Department is appointing a group of private citizens to monitor any changes in UNESCO that might yet allow the United States to stay in.

That is not all. When Mr. Reagan announced last December that he was lowering the American boom on UNESCO, some fear was expressed that he might be going it alone. But two dozen other Western nations are now discussing proposals for reform, their purpose being not simply to head off an American walkout but to remedy what they agree are the organization's shortcomings.

It is too early to say whether, as it did in the then similarly politicized International La-bor Organization, the American threat to walk out is going to induce UNESCO to mend its ways. Special factors, in particular the weight of the AFL-CIO, turned the ILO around. No UNESCO member has been so impolitic as to demand the single step, Mr. M'Bow's early retirement, that would do most to start reviving Western confidence. But corrective efforts are moving forward on a broad front. The hope must be that UNESCO can regain the respect and effectiveness consistent with its potential importance to world culture.

After Europe's Failed Summit

Is Margaret Thatcher for burning? After the failure of the European summit Tuesday night, caused by the obstinate British, the question is on many lips. It is clear that at present there is a fundamental debate: Do the 10 - or the 12 — want the same Europe?

- Le Soir (Brussels).

Probably an interim solution could be considered: The nations that took a constructive stand could form a kind of mini-EC while kept in the waiting room. In a way, this would mean that the Common Market in its present form would be temporarily suspended. Given the disastrous consequences of total collapse of the EC, this interim solution could be justified under the motto: Save what can be saved.

- De Telegraaf (Amsterdam). The failure of the Brussels summit because of the intransigence of Mrs. Thatcher has opened what can be considered as the European Community's greatest crisis.

- Corriere della Sera (Milan). What we face now is oot a crisis but a period of slowly intensifying discomfort which will increasingly demand the relief of a long-term solution. That cannot be achieved without Britain, and Mrs. Thatcher must hang on until it is one that meets Britain's essential interests. That means that it must last. There is oot the slightest reason to think that the other members envisage carrying oo without us. By oow the links are too close for that. The Community is not for unscrambling.

— Le Figaro (Paris).

Margaret Thatcher is not all wrong. It is true that her countrymen are unenthusiastic about Europe and would prefer returning to a free-trade entente. But they may also feel that Europe costs them proportionally much too much, and that continental agriculture's share of the community budget — especially France's — is exorbitant. Who would deny it?

The technocratic approach to the building of Europe has tended to counterbalance the weakening of the European ideal, but it no longer suffices. François Mitterrand, who has not lost sight of that ideal, is trying to bring political voluntarism back to the fore. His approach implies ultimate acceptance of differentiation — of a Europe à la carte.

Mustard Gas for Child Martyrs in 1984

W ASHINGTON — "How many can you shoot if you see 20,000 troops coming at you across the border?" There's an unexpected question for our time. A diplomat, unnamed of course, asked it rhetorically of William Drozdiak of The Washington Post in a discussion of Iraq's use of mustard gas.

The diplomat went on to answer, "If you're prepared to violate the Geneva Convention, then the use of this gas may seem like a sensible if controversial military solution." Defense Minister Adnan Khairallah, while saying that a U.S. statement was "full of lies," told a press conference that his government would use "any weapons at our disposal in any manner we feel necessary." He declined to say what kind of weapons it has. "Do you want us to show our linen before everybody." Among the "troops" are hundreds of thou-sands of Iranian children aged 12 to 17 who are living mine detonators, sent forward on foot as a "human wave." Terence Smith, in The New York Times Magazine, tells of an East European journalist, a reluctant eyewitness, who could hardly believe that he was seeing tens of thousands of children, roped together in groups of 20 to prevent the faint-hearted from deserting, hard themselves onto By Patt Derian ons." There was mention in the press of Iran's use of very young people in the fighting. There were sporadic reports on the military situation. Journalists were in and out. It was a toutine, grim war, potentially "serious" for Western interests, but far away, spread out, hard for anyone to keep up with on a day-today basis. And not much was happening until the human wave offensive begun.

America has no representation in Iran and only a small interest section in Iraq, so there was little diplomatically generated news. In December and January, as the fifth anniversary of the Iranian revolution drew near, a number of American journalists re-quested visas. As far as I can tell, Iran shut its doors to all of them. Some observers believe that the government, recruiting for its astonishing new tactic, did not want publicity. Coercing legions of defenseless children to their deaths is not something even a nation committed to the honor and joys of religious martyrdom wishes to advertise.

Publicity would have been hard to avoid as sound trucks rolled through the streets urging barbed wire or march into the Iraqi mine fields in the face of withering machine gun fire to clear the way for Iranian tanks.

We have so few tanks," an Iranian officer explained, without apology.

Iran and Iraq have been at war for three and a half years. For the most part they have been hacking away inconclusively.

The U.S. State Department's human rights reports for 1983 noted that "Iran has charged that Iraq has used prohibited chemical weapchildren to volunteer for service. Local mullahs were given quotas of children to recruit. The youngsters were bombarded with appeals to their patriotism and religious beliefs.

Parents were promised that if their sons were killed the families would get small amounts of money, an increase in rations, an assortment of other benefits and a lime on their identity cards indicating that the family had a martyr. They can also fly to and spend several days in Damascus, where they escape Iranian rationing. Business is so brisit that a hotel is set aside for their use. Selling their rues and pistachios, it is reported, they don't bay luxuries with the proceeds, but everyday things such as cooking utensils and mundane necessities no longer available at home.

The children go off to camps for intense hrainwashing, a smattering of military training and a big dose of the joys at hand in the hereafter. Trained to die, each is given a headband with a religious slogan, a khakicolored rough jacket with the stenciled mes-sage that they have permission of the Imam to enter heaven," and a key on a chain around their necks to ensure their entry.

An Iranian woman living in exile has made three trips to Iraq to interview the survivors. After speaking with nearly 200, she estimated that for every boy who makes it to a prison camp, 99 have been blown to hits by mines or machine-gunned to death.

The Iraqis have now trotted six youngsters before the press to prove Ayatollah Khomeini wrong in his assertion that there are no children among the fighters. There is no reason to think that the Iraqis are high-minded. They are the people using mustard gas.

A "foreign military official" is quoted in William Drozdisk's story as commenting that

"the relatively low casualty rate caused by Iraq's usage indicates in a crudely pragmatic sense that "it may not be such a big deal."

Look at it pragmatically. This war has gone on too long. The systollah needs a big win, and he needs it now. He makes an inventory of materiel, finds be is short of tanks, without mine sweepers and loaded with surplus boys. What is simpler than lining them up in cos-tumes and marching them by the hundreds of thousands into mined fields and gunfire?

Try to understand Realpolitik. The Iraqis face hordes of children running their way and followed by tanks and real soldiers. They can't kill them all, although they are doing their best. The Iraqis have been dropping a little mustard gas all along and nobody but the Iranians made a fuss. Obviously, the sensible thing to do is speed up production and drop a lot more. It has the twin benefits of causing great suffering and great terror.

the routinely cruel mistreatment of their own people, have reached deeply into the barbarities of the past to horrify today's world.

Too Much Scorekeeping, Too Little Substance

LBANY, New York - Ameri-ALBANY, New York — Ameri-ca's national press and television represent a wealth of talent, energy and political insight. Why then do they fail to use their great resources to inform and educate; rather than entertain, the public in their coverage of the presidential primaries?

The vote for president is one of the most important choices that Americans make. And while party preference plays some role in our decisions, we ultimately compare the candi-dates as individuals. We must rely on the press and television to inform us about who the candidate is, where he or she comes from personally and philosophically, what qualifications he or she possesses.

Journalists should probe the candidate's abilities and weaknesses, con-centrating oo the qualities most important in a potential president.

But the emphasis in news coverage, particularly in octwork televisioo ocws, has shifted away from information toward entertainment.

Night after night, reports focus on the dynamics of the political "arena," the latest "scores" and the machinery that makes the contest tick - public opinion projections, stumping strategies, point spreads and pollsters' interviews. A candidate's views of issues are oversimplified until they seem almost meaningless.

Political coverage has become too much like a pregame sports show, surprising rise, many blindly echoed devoted to the color and drama of the athletic contest. Locker room strategies, coaching styles, won-lost records and instant replay make for good entertainment, but the presiential election is oot a game.

In straining to entertain, the networks jump eagerly at any early trends. They anoint inevitable victors and ignore the recent history that cautions against snap judgments about primaries. Then, when they find they are wrong, they jump hastily at the next trend, apparently un-chastened by their earlier mistakes.

Only a few weeks ago, most jour-nalists were convinced that Walter F. behind the front-runner than Jimmy Carter was in 1976. They forgot how Lyndon B. Johnson and Edmund S. Muskie once fell in New Hampshire, and ignored the lessons of Jimmy Carter's misleading 2-to-1 lead over

Ronald Reagan in early 1980. Having commissioned most of the opinion polls that put Mr. Mondale on top, the press and television mis-understood their results. Caught off guard by Mr. Hart's consequently his "new ideas" theme without explaining or exploring it. Others wrongfully suggested that he had no ideas to match his slogan. As a supporter of Mr. Mondale, I note oeverheless that Mr. Hart's legislative record is backed up, for better or worse, with position papers that the press should have reported long ago.

No significant distinctions are drawn between the philosophies, characters and policies of the three men - just who is on top at the time and bow tight his grip is.

As we in government are improved and strengthened by criticism from the press, so I believe the press should be alerted when we on the outside feel that its coverage fails to inform.

The media should not lead the public to believe that the dynamics of the political process matter more ootice that Gary Hart was no farther more than the candidate; or that issues and character have little to do with the selection of a president.

Let's hear less about age differences and more about ideas - about economic policies, strategic theories, concerns relating to education, energy and the environment.

The press has a great, leading role in America's political process. We must implore the leaders of our fourth estate to shift their emphasis to substance and character.

Reagan's Rhetoric Is Seasonally Preposterous

WASHINGTON — His rhetoric may mislead some Americans into thinking of Mr. Reagan as a churchgoing man. But he hasn't gone to church for many years. Here we are talking about hypocrisy, which is an early stage of preposterousness. On March 6 in Columbus, Ohio, Mr. Reagan addressed a convention of the National Association of Evangelicals on the subject of "religious values in poblic life." He said that America in the 1960s and '70s suffered a long moral decline. But no more. Today, be said, there is "a great national renewal" because "Americans are turning back to God."

Think about this for a moment. Here is a president whose administra-

tioo could almost be compared with Warren G. Harding's as a refuge for scoundrels, bragging of a return to the noblest moral values — which he associates with a religious revival that he attributes to his own presidency. It is difficult to tally up all the Reagan appointees who have re-signed under an ethical cloud, some before they could start work on the government job Mr. Reagan had given them. The total is at least 22. Mr. Reagan is strongly for the family, he also tells us repeatedly. He recalls the good old days when "the American family was still the basic building block of our society."

By Robert Kaiser

Americans are suckers for family, even as they redefine its meaning with high divorce rates, new living arrangements, increasing numbers of one-parent households and so on. But Ronald Reagan extolling old-fashioned family life is a lot like Ronald Reagan bragging about in-creased church attendance.

His own family is a good model of the new rather than the traditional family verities. His wife, Nancy, apparently feels uncomfortable with the children of Mr. Reagan's first mar-riage to actress Jane Wyman, so they are rarely seen with the president.

One of them, Michael Reagan, has produced the president's only grand-children. Michael told Redbook Magazine last fall that his son Cameron, then 5, had been in the White House once but that his infant daughter Ashley had never met her paternal grandfather. He said that the "real first family" was the president, Nancy Reagan and their two children, Patti and Ron.

Ron got married recently without informing his parents, and without them in attendance. Patri, an aspiring actress, has little to do with her father's political career and goes out of her way to disassociate herself from his constituency. She has told a California newspaper that living with a boyfriend is as normal as "brushing your teeth," and that arresting people for smoking marijuana is "silly."

The fact is that Ronald and Nancy Reagan appear to be much more like the people their fundamentalist supporters decry. They are elitists of a particular California variety who like to be surrounded by high-livers.

The evidence suggests that Ronald Reagan is a closet tolerant. For political purposes he may support laws that would prevent women from having abortions, or compel children to pray in school or declare their indif-ference to prayer, but in private he is neither preachy nor puritanical.

It would be unfair to leave the subject of preposterousness without acknowledging that Ronald Reagan has no comer on the market. We are in the silly season now - we call it a presidential campaign.
H.L. Mencken reminded us years ago that "the true charm of democracannot be enjoyed by the politicy" cannot be enjoyed by the ponu-cian, but by "the spectator." This is surely true, although many would re-sist going all the way with Mencken's cynicism. "I confess," wrote the bard of Baltimore, "I enjoy democracy im-mensely. It is incomparably idiotic, and hence incomparably amusing." The Washington Past.

Americans and Israelis: The Alliance Is Natural

By Krishna Kumar Gaur

CHICAGO — King Hussein's outburst against U.S. Mideast policy has caused great dismay in official Washington, but he has said much the same before. In fact, so have all of America's Arab friends. Sooner or later America's Arab friends bring up the inevitable question: Why doesn't Washington put pressure on Israel to give up occupied Arab lands, or to stop creating new settlements on the West Bank?

This is, mind you, not the same as asking why doesn't the United States pressure Israel into dealing with the PLO, although that surely is an eventual stage in the journey of American policy that they hope to help launch. Sometimes they supply answers. The United States does not put pressure on Israel, they say, because American banks and corporations are controlled by Jews. The Jews, they say, also control the media and never allow fair reporting of the Arab-Israeli conflict. And Jews control or intimidate members of the U.S. Congress through political contributions and voting-bloc pressure.

Hackneyed, prejudiced, demon-strably wrong, but oevertheless sincerely and passionately held beliefs.
The fact is that the bonds between America and Israel are not the result nalists were convinced that Walter F. than the issues, and the professional of ethnic pressure, although the pressure and the professional of ethnic pressure, although the pressure exists, and is felt, like any other organized ethnic pressure in the United States. However, if it were not for stronger, more enduring reasons, that pressure could easily backfire. Foremost, as far as the American public is concerned, is the perception of Israel as a valiant little country surrounded by hostile neighbors and populated by a long-persecuted people. This is a valid perception.

Then there is the perception of Israel as an outpost of Western, Judeo-Christian civilization holding its own against alien forces. This, too, is a valid perception. Israel is also an oasis of stability in a desert of constantly shifting sand, an island of freedom in an ocean of autocracy and tyranny. And that gives it a special value, a special role in U.S. foreign policy.

The point was brought home forcefully last year in a conversation in the Middle East with a PLO official of Middle Past with a FLO official of leftist leanings. He dismissed the "Jewish money, media and votes" theory with disdain. Only partly valid. Only minimally valid, perhaps. Then he explained his own theory. Deep down, he said, Americans don't consider Arabs - or any other

Regarding the opinion column "More Than Was Seen at the Time" (March 12) by Philip Geyelin:

The support given by the Americans to Britain during or prior to the Falklands war can only be welcome news to the American public, and in this respect I would take issue with the caveat expressed in the last sen-tence of Mr. Geyelin's article referring to "how easily the U.S. government can involve itself in conflicts not of its own public's choosing."

Certainly the U.S. Congress did not debate and specifically authorize the military support and supplies. But anyone in America during the war could only be impressed by the almost universal support of Britain's position by the public at large, as well as a definite feeling of embarrass-ment early on that the U.S. government was not leaning hard enough in support of Britain. There is no doubt that the U.S. government's support of Britain's cause was very much of its own public's choosing. BRIAN JACKSON-POWNALL Favence, France.

By BRENDAN BROWN

The author is a currency economist at the London-based firm of Phillips & Drew.

T is neither the gnomes of Zurich nor the sheikhs of OPEC that currency investors are blaming for their mistakes over the past year. It is the Japanese. The near trebling of Japanese investment in dollar bonds, the heavy borrowing in Swiss francs by Japanese corporations and the aggressive foreign lending in yen by Japanese banks and security houses have all been crucial to the amazing resilience of the dollar in the face of a hugh U.S. current account deficit.

The influence of Tokyo on world currency markets — and not just on those involving the yen — is likely to grow further, as Japan exports large quantities of capital to offset its trade sorplus. Japan has now emerged as the second largest purchaser after Switzerland of international bonds. Japanese trust companies and pension funds are seeking to attain the 10-percent target for foreign assets as a share of their portfolio that has been set for the end of 1985 by the Ministry of Fi-nance. Some funds are nearing

Japan's role in world finance has been crucial to the dollar's resilience the target but many are still far behind. In addition, banks are buying foreign bonds for their own account, given their endemic surplus of funds owing to sluggish domestie loan demand and to the high savings rate in Japan. Foreign bond purchases by Japanese investors will probably match this year the $15-billion annual rate reached in the second

So far, Japanese purchases have been concentrated on bonds denominated in U.S., Canadian and Australian dollars. Nomura Research has estimated that the trust companies, which account for 60 percent of total foreign bond holdings in Japan, have a foreign currency exposure of 40 percent in dollars, 24 percent in Canadian dollars, 12 percent in Australian dollars, 10 percent in British pounds, 5 percent in Deutsche marks and 9 percent in other currencies. The trust companies eschew investment in lowered the percent in the species of Mort. iance Is Natur ment in low-yield bond markets, such as the Swiss or West German markets. Competition between the companies to achieve growth in bonus payments is fierce, and, according to Japanese accounting rules, these can be paid only out of current interest or dividend income, not out of capital gains.

Japanese institutions are likely to remain conservative in how they divide their portfolios between dollar and nondollar currencies, given their historic and commercial ties to the United States. Their most likely reaction to fears of a fall in the dollar would be to accelerate their purchases of high-yielding European monies, such as the pound, French franc, or securities denominated in European Currency Units, Hence the Deutsche mark may be less strong against its European neighbors during spells of dollar weakness than in the 1970s.

It is not just through investment in foreign bond markets that I Japan exerts its influence on exchange markets. Japanese corporations are now the single largest group of borrowers in the international bond market, where they are expected to raise this year more than 1983's record total of $7 billion. Three quarters of these Japanese external bonds are now issued in the Swiss

In this way principally European savings are being siphoned off to finance Japanese business expansion mainly in dollar-area countries and in Japan itself. European currencies are thereby enfeebled. The role of Swiss banks in promoting loans to Japan, a principal competitor of Switzerland's precision industries, has provided ammunition to the banks' critics in the run-up to the eferendum on bank secrecy in May.

Japanese corporations, in curtailing their use of high-cost dollar finance, are participating in a worldwide trend for borrowers to repay dollar debts by raising new loans in low-interest-rate currencies. The trend underpins the U.S. dollar, since the dollars for repayment must be bought in the currency markets.

Japanese banks have abetted the trend by making low-interest ven loans to public-sector borrowers abroad who are more concerned about keeping down interest costs in their current budgets than about the risk of an eventual large loss should the yen appreciate sharply. Long-term yen lending abroad by Japanese banks soared to an estimated $6 billion in 1983, and the Ministry of Finance is expected to sanction further strong growth this year. Important borrowers in yen have included France Denmark, Spain and several supranational organizations.

Encounter Turbulence

By Agis Salpukas New York Times Service

NEW YORK — With deregulation on its side, the fledgling airline Pacific Express seemed to have everything going for it when it took to the air two years ago. Such upstart airlines would proliferate and flourish, the thinking went, even taking no large carriers in major markets.

But for Pacific Express and about a dozen other carriers that have been started since decontrol in 1978, the vision of the major airlines as cumbersome dinosaurs, unable to respond effectively to competition from feisty young fare cutters, has proved myopic.

Indeed, six years after deregulation, a new pattern is emerging. It is one of a three-tiered industry, with the major airlines — the strongest are United. American. Delta and Northeast - no top, dominating many of the most lucrative routes.

They are coexisting more or less peacefully with a group of nider, regional sirlines, among them Piedmont, Ozark, USAir and PSA. Most of the upstarts begun since 1978 are on the third tier, scrambling now for the leftovers.

That scramble forced Pacific and another carrier, Hawaii Express, to file earlier this year for reorganization under U.S. bankruptcy law. And some of the other oew airlines have had to change strategies to survive after their nider brethren drove them out by entting fares and adding flights. Their strategy change usually has meant searching for a special market niche in which the major carriers were not interested. Even in this scenario, of course, there are unicer-tainties. It remains to be determined in which tier the reorganized Continental, the ailing Eastern and the new Braziff will eventually land. What is clear, some analysts say, is that the proliferation of oew carriers may be over.

"There are very few market niches left," said Julius Maldutis, audine analyst for Salomon Brothers. "It's going to be very difficult to develop new airlines. I would suspect we will see very few new airlines formed. We may be entering a period of consolidation and shakeout among the new air-

U.S. Inflation Settles Back to 5% Annual Rate

By John M. Berry

WASHINGTON — Smaller food price increases last munth allowed consumer price inflation to settle back to the 5 percent annual rate it has maintained for more than half a year, the Labor Depart-ment reported Friday.

The consumer price index rose a re consumer price moex rose a seasonally adjusted 0.4 percent in February following January's 0.6-percent rise, which was due largely to a big weather-related jump, 2.4 percent, in grocery store prices. Grocery prices rose 0.9 percent last month, the department said. month, the department said.

Economie forecasters are divided over what the course of inflation will be. The Reagan administration and some private economists expect consumer prices to rise less than 5 percent this year. Other private economists believe inflatinn will continue at about current levels, while yet another group pre-dicts a significant acceleration to a rate of between 6 percent and 8 percent by early next year.

Martin S. Feldstein, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, said the February increase "provides further evidence that the economy is not overheating."

Mr. Feldstein said the 0.4 percent rise was in line with the administration's forecast for the year. When the volatile food and energy prices are excluded, the inflation performance in February was an even better 3-percent annual rate," he added.

Declining prices for apparel, gas-oline and public transportatino also helped bold down the February increase. However, the cost of medical care climbed nearly three times as fast as the rest of the Consumer Price Index.

Housing costs rose 0.5 percenfor the second month in a row, mainly as a result of a 1.7-percent increase io the cost of fuels and utilities, up from a January gain of 1.2 percent

Fuel oil prices shot up 6.9 per-cent, the largest increase in three years, after rising 26 percent in January. With these increases, fuel oil prices are only 2.1 percent lower than at their peak in April 1981.

The cost of local telephone services rose 3 percent last mooth af-ter a record 8.5-percent increase in January. Both increases reflected the nationwide restructuring of the telephone system, the department

The transportation portion of the index was unchanged in February following 0.2-percent increases in the twn previous months. A 1.5percent drop in gasoline prices the fifth consecutive monthly decline - was offset by higher prices for new cars. Gasoline prices are now 13.3 percent below their peak of March 1981.

The medical care component of the index, which had an average monthly increase of 0.5 percent during 1983, went up 0.8 percent in February, compared to a 0.7-percent rise in January. Physicians' fees and the cost of dental services rose 1.2 percent each. Excludiog medical care, the overall price index would have risen only 0.3 percent, the Labor Department said.

Some food prices continued to rise sharply even though the rise for the entire category sinwed. Beef and veal prices rose 1.7 percent after a 3.5-percent jump in January. Pork prices went up 0.4 per-cent after a 5.2-percent increase the mnoth before,

Egg prices advanced 2.2 percent. but that was down sharply from the 21.3-percent gain in January. Fresh fruit prices rose 0.3 percent following a 7.8-percent gain. Vegetable prices, up 7 percent the previous month, rose 3.3 percent. The indexes for restaurant meals and alcoholic beverages rose 0.2 percent and 0.1 percent, respectively.

Kaufman Forecast Pushes Dow Down

Odd-Lat Trading in N.Y.

NYSE Diaries

NEW YORK — Prices on the New York Stock Exchange slipped for the third consecu-tive session Friday after Salomon Brothers' chief economist, Henry Kaufman, predicted that the Federal Reserve would raise the discount rate it charges member banks.

But prices firmed a bit after Paul A. Volcker, the Fed chairman, said he could live with a small increase in the U.S. inflation rate. Mr. Mr. Volcker said the economy was at a critical stage. The Dow Jones industrial average, down nearly 7 points at midsession, eased 1.04 to 1,154.84. The average fell 29.52 for the week, including 14.97 on Thursday.

Declines led advances by 9 to 7. Volume slowed to 80.2 million shares from 87.3 million Thursday.

"Basically, this has been a dull session with the big players sitting on the sidelines," said Marvin Katz of Sanford C. Bernstein & Co. Mr. Kaufman's prediction of a one-point rise in the discount rate to 94 percent by late April followed the Fed's report Thursday of a $4billion surge in the money supply. The discount rate has been at 8½ percent since December

"I think it would be stupid for the Fed to hike the discount rate now and risk a fight with the Reagan administration," said Keith Pinson-eault of Underwood, Neuhaus & Co., Houston. AT&T was the most active NYSE-listed issue, off ¼ to 15½. The company has warned that it might cut its dividend if the Federal Communications Commission does not shift soon on instituting access charges.

Superior Oil, which is in a $5.7-billion merger agreement with Mobil, was second on the list, off ¼ to 40%. Gulf Oil, which is in a $13.2-billion merger with Standard Oil of California, was fourth, up 1/2 to 75%.

General Motors was the third most active issue, up 1/4 to 65. Ford rose 1/8 to 371/4 and Chrysler 1/4 to 271/4. All reported strong mid-March sales.

New Evidence Cited on X-Car

United Press International WASHINGTON — General Motors Corp. documents show that the antomaker noticed problems with the brakes of 1980 X-cars before it began selling them nationwide, a govern-ment official says. Robert Hellmuth, chief of the defects evaluation division of the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, testified Thursday before a court in Washington that the documents showed that company engineers and test drivers had issued re-ports about brake defects early in 1979. Most of the reports said the brakes caused the car's wheels to lock prematurely, be

The government is trying to force GM to recall 1.1 million 1980-model X-cars, claiming their brakes are dangerously de fective. The cars were marketed under the names Chevrolet Citation, Buick Skylark, Pontiac Phoenix and Oldsmobile Omega. GM has said the government's action is unwarranted.

Rose 40%, Aided by Dollar

LONDON - Higher oil production and the strength of the dollar helped push Britoil PLC's profit up sharply in 1983, the company re-ported Friday.

Net income rose 40 percent from a year before to £143.3 million ($206 million) on sales of £1.2 billion, up 10 percent. The profit was above most forecasts, but Robert Speirs, director of planning. said the results "justified what we've been saying all year." Britoil shares gained 10 pence to end the

The company's production of oil and gas rose 18 percent last year to about 194 thousand barrels a day of oil equivalent, according to the brokerage Scott, Goff, Hancock & Co. The strength of the dollar in-creased the value of Britoil's production in sterling terms, since oil is poced in dollars.

In some cases they are surviving because a major carrier has not chosen to push them out. Many analysts believe People Express, for example, has been able to continue is New York-Washington-Boston shuttle because Easteru, its bigger competitor, has not been financially strong enough or well-managed enough to go after it.

A recurring problem for some smaller carriers is that the major ones can fly many more planes on a route if they want to drive out an upstart, and often they have the

"the melancholy, touching picture of two weaknesses, taking refuge perhaps in each other's arms to sleep there, weep there, to escape man who was often bad, and to enjoy, more than any pleasure, the bitter happiness of feeling themselves akin, and insignificant, and forgotten."

in 1913, Henry (The Tiger) de Jouvenel became Colette's second husband. With a fine French élan, he said: "I am the only man in Paris capable of marrying that woman." They were very happy for awhile, enjoying what Colette called in "Cheri," her most famous book, "The Tumultuous Brutality of Love." But it grew too brutal or tumultuous for The Tiger when he learned that Colette was also sleeping with Bertrand, his younger son, who was virtually a schoolboy. To her daughter, who was born when Colette was 40, she was rather distant, advising her in a letter to "struggle a little with yourself, it's the best form of gymnastics."

With "Cheri," a love story of a young man and an older woman which appeared in 1920, Colette offered the French an image of themselves as tragic sensualists that they found irresistible. Reviewing a second volume, "La Fin de Cheri," a critic wrote that, though Colette was "indifferent to the loftier preoccupations of humanity, here she attains the salvation of anxiety." Another critic said, "we owe it to Madame Colette to lose all our illusious about

During her later years, Colette became a national pet as literary honors were showered on her. In her apartment overlooking the gardens of the Palais Royal, she became cosy - the sensuality of old age - and wrote "Paris de Ma Fenêtre" and books about plants and animals. She was wonderfully looked after by her third busband. Maurice Goudeket, and all Paris sent her presents or came to see her. When she died in 1954, Jean Coctean wrote that, "it was not a question of funeral rites, but rather of gardeners digging, of passing from one reign to another, of earth and flesh in collabora-

In "Colette," Joanna Richardson has a great subject and she has not wasted a single muance. One can imagine Colette herself reading this book with her "undeceivable eyes" and saying, "Oui, c'est moi.

C OLETTE'S grandfather on the maternal side was nicknamed "The Gorilla." Her father was known in Burgundy, where she was born, as "The Savage." Henry de Jouvenel, the grand passion of Colette's long amatory career, had already earned the title of "The Tiger" before she met him. It would seem that France's most famous woman writer was born to be earthy and unconventional. As Jean Cocteau observed in assessing her tastes, "she refused none of the fruitful putrefactions of life."

In "Colette," Joanna Richardson tells us everything about her scandalous subject but without making a scandal of her biography. The author of books about Théophile Gautier, Paul Verlaine and Emile Zola, she approaches the author of "Chen" with something like Colette's own cosmopolitanism. She is as tactful as she is thorough, giving us the facts dispassionately, usually in someone else's words. Since almost every writer in Paris seems to have commented on Colette before she died in 1954 at the age of 81. Richardson's book is a ripe and witty anthology of contemporary French criticism. When she was 20 years old, Colette married Henri Ganthier-Villars, known as Willy, a literary handyman in Paris, who locked her in a room and ordered her to write. He published the result, "Claudine à l'Ecole," under his own name in 1900 and it was an immediate success. In the first flush of their prosperity. Willy moved Colette into an apartment on the Rue Jacob where the walls were papered with multicolored confetti. He gave her a bicycle without brakes or mud guards and after two more successful Claudine books he provided her with a gymnasiu complete with a trapeze, rings, ladders and parallel

In 1906, Colette left Willy and her "squirrel cage" to live with a lesbian marquise who dressed in mechanic's overalls. In his memoirs, Renaud de Jouvenel, the eldest son of Colette's second busband, offered an interesting explanation of her bisexuality. Her father had lost a leg in the army and, according to Renaud, Colette's sensibility was affected by the thought of her mother making love with a one-legged man. Her own version of ber liaisons with women was rather literary, envoking

British Clubs Kept Apart in Cup Play

GENEVA (AP) - Six British teams were kept apart by Friday's draw or semifinal matches in the European soccer cup competitions, raising the possibility of all-British finals in all three events.

In the Champions' Cup, Liverpool will meet Dynamo Bucharest at home in the first leg on April 11, while Dundee United of Scotland will play at home against the Italian champion, Roma. The return matches are scheduled April 25.

In the Cup Winners' Cup, Manchester United will play the first leg at home against the Italian club Juventus, while the defending titlist, Aberdeen of Scotland, will open on the road against Porto of Portugal. Belgium's Anderlecht, seeking its second consecutive UEFA Cup, will travel to England to face Nottingham Forest in the first leg, while Tottenham Hotspur will go to Yugoslavia to play Hajduk Split.

NFL to Study Effects of Rival League

HONOLULU (NYT) - Pete Rozelle, the commissioner of the Naional Football League, has confirmed that he will appoint a committee of club executives to study the long-range future of the league and how i night minimize the effects of the United States Football League. When the committee is appointed, it will represent the first acknowledged step by the NFL in any regard to deal with the USFL, now in its second season. "It's not a go-to-war committee," Rozelle said Thursday.

"We just want to take an overall look at our future."

In another development, Gene Klein, who owns 51 percent of the San Diego Chargers, said in San Diego that he would consider offers for his interest in the team. "But that's not to say I will sell it," he added. It was reported earlier that Klein had already put his interest up for sale.

≥ 3 Golfers Share Lead in New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) - Larry Mize, Bob Eastwood and Gary Hallberg each shot a 6-under-par 66 Thursday to share the first-round lead in the New Orleans Open golf tournament.

One shot behind at 67 were Adam Adams, Jim Kane, Bernhard Langer and Mike Reid. Six golfers — Vance Heafner, Morris Hatalsky, Allen Miller, John Mahaffey, Greg Norman and Danny Edwards — were at 68.

Mize took an early lead, hitting two birdies on the front nine at the Lakewood Country Club and three on the back nine. Eastwood had six birdies to give him 33s on the front and back nines. Hallberg answered

For the Record

Drew Pearson, the Dallas Cowboys' wide receiver, was in stable but serious condition Friday in Dallas after an automobile accident in which his brother, Carey Mark Pearson, was killed. Officials were optimistic about the recovery of the 33-year-old football player, who fell asleep while driving Thursday and crashed into a parked truck. (AP)

Willie Aikens of the Toronto Blue Jays was released Friday from a 'ederal prison in Fort Worth, Texas, nine days before the end of his three-menth sentence for a cocaine conviction. Aikens has been suspended for the 1984 baseball season, but the action will be reviewed by May 15. (AP) Dennis McLain, a 30-game winner for the Detroit Tigers in 1968, surrendered to federal marshals Thursday in Tampa, Florida, on charges of racketeering, loan sharking, bookmaking, extortion and drug offenses. McLain, 39, was one of seven persons named in an indictment. He was freed on a $200,000 bond. (AP) Ernie Cobh, a former Boston College basketball star, and a co-defendant were acquitted Friday in New York of taking part in a point-shaving scheme to benefit gamblers during the 1978-79 season. # Hamilton Moves Closer To Figure Skating Title

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches OTTAWA - Scott Hamilton, feeling "a hundred pounds bighter" than at the Olympics, delivered a heavyweight performance to win the men's short program and move a step closer to his fourth straight title at the World Figure Skating Championships.

Barbara Underhill and Paul Martini of Canada won the pairs competition Thursday night, dethroning Elena Valova and Oleg Vasiliev of the Soviet Union, the Olympic gold medalists and defending world champions. Earlier, two other Olympic champions, Jayne Torvill and Christopher Dean of Britain, scored seven perfect marks in the ice dance compulsories — the first time such a feat has been accomplished at any world. Olympic or European event — to help the pur-suit of their fourth straight title. At the Olympics last month in Sarajevo, Hamilton was outscored in the short program by Brian Orser of Canada — his first loss since 1982 — but beld on to win the gold medal. The 25-year-old Amer-ican avenged the setback Thursday night to pad his overall lead going into Friday night's long program, the final segment.

"Tonight, I skated for me," he said. "It wasn't for marks, it wasn't for place, it was for me.

"I felt a hundred pounds lighter than the Olympics," he added, "They meant so much to me. You know how you wake up some mornings in a good mood — that's how I felt on the ice." Orser, the silver medalist at Sarajevo, bad trouble Thursday in landing his combination — a triple httz. double loop — but managed to keep his balance. He finished second behind Hamilton to move up to fifth overall from seventh. Rudi Cerne of West Germany placed fifth in the short program to remain in second overall. The Olympic bronze medalist, Jozef Saboveik of Czechoslovakia, finished fourth in the short program to move into third in the standings. In the pairs competition, Underhill and Martini made up for a disappointing seventh-place finish near-perfect marks for their repertoire of lifts, jumps, triple throws and spins. Valova and Vasiliev, who made several technical errors, finished second, followed by Sabine Baess and Tassilo Thierbach of East Germany. ## The $40-Million Man

WASHINGTON — All I know about sports is what I read in the newspaper. The other day headlines bannered the signing of a "My knees are killing me." "We'll give you another opera-Brigham Young quarterback. Steve Young, for $40 million by the Los Angeles Express, a USFL-franchised football team. Details of the contract varied in different sports pages as to how the money would be paid. The one story I read said the payout would be over a period of 43 years. The article did not indicate whether Young would have to play for 43 years or not. But I can't believe any professional football Buchwald owner shelling out 40 million bucks would not expect a quarterback to play out the full life of his contract. Since Young is now 24 years old I can see him playing up to his reputation for the first 15 years.

But then things could start getting a little tough, when he approaches the 40 mark.

The first sign that he isn't the quarierback he used to be might come in a key game in 1999 against the Chicago Blitz. Young is intercepted for the fourth time and his coach is steaming mad.
"What happened?" the coach screams at him. "I don't know, My shoulder seems to hurt. I could use a few weeks off."

We can't give a $40-million quarterback a few weeks off. You're costing us so much money we can't afford a backup quarterback. Now you go out there when we get the ball again and get us three touchdowns,"

Ten years later Young, at 50, his knees having been operated on 14 times, hobbles onto the field. He is sacked nine times. A new coach is frothing at the mouth.

"Why didn't you scramble on that last play." the coach cries. "I tried to but I just doo't seem to have the moves I used to."

Don't give me that. You're the ghest-paid quarterback io football. We wouldn't have signed you

We'll give you another opera-tion when the season is over. But right now you better play football, or we'll trade you to the Alaska Eskimos. The owner didn't pay 40 million bucks to see his quarterback fall all over the ground."

Ten years later, at 60. Young with two artificial knees, two artificial hips and one artificial shoulder, is still calling signals for the Los Angeles Express. He calls for a screen pass in the huddle, and then tries to hand off the ball to his fullback, whose assignment is to block a defensive end. The hall drops to the ground, Tampa recovers and goes in for the score. This is too much for the owner of the Los Angeles Express who rushes down from his box and starts chewing out Young. "What are you doing to me?" the owner demands.

"I'm sorry, sir. It's just that it's getting harder and harder for me to remember the plays." "That's what you're being paid for. Do you think I shelled out $40 million for a quarterback that doesn't even study his play book?"

"I study it, but I forget. Sir. is there any chance of getting out of my contract?"

A contract's a contract. You've still got eight years to go. I've got a lot of money invested to you, Young, and I'm not going to let you go now, just when you're hitting your prime."

Eight years later, it's Young's last game. He has had two cataract operations, a pacemaker implant, a kidney transplant, and is taken in and out of the game in a wheelchair.

Two linemed have been assigned to hold him up when he gets the ball. On the first play the entire defensive line of the Georgia Gorillas breaks through and smashes Young to the ground.

When he doesn't get up after five minutes, the Express sends out the paramedics who wheel him off the field in a stretcher. As they work over him, the reporters say to the owner, "Was he worth $40 mil-

"In retrospect probably not. But you never know about these things until you play the guy for awhile."

Dustin Hoffman's Return to Broadway

By Mel Gussow New York Times Service

New York — Arthur Miller remembers: It was almost 20 years ago and Ulu Grosbard was directing an off-Broadway production of "A View From the Bridge." One day, the director said to him that there was a member of the company who should play Willy Loman in "Death of a Salesman." The playwright looked around the theater — at Robert Duvali playing the leading role, at Jon Voight and the other promising actors who were re-hearsing and hoping to make a break-through—and then realized that the direc-

A short, unprepossessing young man, the stage manager looked, Miller recalls, "as if be had barely gotten out of high school." He was, however, an actor, totally unknown, hut soon to make a vivid impression on another off-Broadway stage. Within three years, in his first Hollywood role he was to become a movie star. Io his most recent film, he played an actor so desperate to work that he would do anything — even pretend to be an actress. Now the cycle is complete: He is playing the 63-year-old Willy Loman in "Death of a Salesman," opening March 29 at the Broadhurst Theater here. To those, such as Miller, who have admired him for many years, it is a most natural giant step in the career of Dustin Hoffman.

Now at the peak of his profession, Hoffman is one of the United States's finest and most popular actors. In a career spanning 17 films, playing characters of remarkable diversity, he has given unfailingly good performances — even in his few lesser

But for all the measurable success, he remains a man obsessed by his work, craving perfection and driven by private demoas. In pursuit of his goal, which he considers artistic excellence, he has had furious battles with movie directors.

As for Miller, he bas been patiently waiting for Hoffman to grow into the role of Willy Loman. And to anyone who thinks that, at 46, the actor is still too young, the playwright is quick to point out that Lee J. Cohh originated the role when he was 37. Io addition. Miller conceived of Willy as a little man and, in fact, altered a few lines of dialogue to accommodate Cobb's burly physique. In the original script, Willy was referred to as "a shrimp," which became, in Cobb's version, "a walrus." Once again, Willy is a "shrimp,"

Hoffman feels an emotional identifica-tion with the plays of Miller and the world of Willy Loman. Ever since he read the play - at the age of 17 - he bas had "a fix" on the character, much of that based on parallels he sees in his own family.

The first time Hoffman drew close to Willy was in the mid-60s, when Grosbard directed a production of the play for a long-playing record, with Cohb re-creating his role. Hoffman acted the small part of Bernard, the best friend of Willy's son Biff. During rehearsal, he often sat next to Cobb, watching him with an actor's eagle eye. as if trying to memorize his art and to steal his image.

For eight years, before and after that recording. Hoffman struggled as an actor, He checked coats at the Longacre Theater bere, washed dishes and served as a custodian of a dance studio.

"I got on stage whenever I was allowed to." he said. Occasionally, he was fired. Finally, with back-to-back roles as a Nazi homosexual and a Russian clerk in two Ronald Ribman plays, "Harry, Noon and Night" and "Journey of the Fifth Horse," he astonished audiences, and he was discovered for the first of several

Then Mike Nichols took a chance on the off-Broadway actor to play the title role in "The Graduate." Overnight, he became a movie star. As he said to me about his sudden success. "I plummeted to star-

Several years ago, on both a personal and professional level, he began going through changes. His marriage to Anne Byrne, a dancer, was breaking up. He was involved in a lawsuit against his manager (the case is now being settled out of court). His film "Straight Time," a hard-edged story of an ex-convict, was victimized by a variety of problems, some of his own making. He was in what he later described as worst period of my life."

Gradually pulling himself out of his slough, he made "Kramer vs. Kramer," filming a movie about a failed marriage while he was going through his own di-vorce. Art allowed him to achieve some resolution about life. "I feel that life isn't important unless I'm using it. That's my dilemma. Others would say life isn't to be used, it's just to be experienced."

Oo a visit to his parents in California, he reacquainted himself with Lisa Gottsegen, the granddaughter of his mother's best friend. Family legend says that at 10, she had announced. "When I grow up, I'm going to marry Dustin." And so she did. In quick succession, they had two children, with a third due in August (in addition, he has two daughters from his previous mar-

Over the years, he frequently talked to me about returning to the theater and about the difficulty of deciding what role to do. But, for predictable reasons, beginning with his escalating movie salary, he decided not to. One play was foremost in the back of his mind, "Death of a Salesman," but, like an English actor waiting to ripen into King Lear, he was saving it for some future, older age.

John Malkovich, Hoffman, Stephen Lang in "Death of a Salesman,"

Last June, while at his country house in Connecticut, Hoffman visited his neighbor Arthur Miller, and said that once again he was between movies and was thinking about doing a play, Miller said — and Hoffman remembers the exact oegativism of the phrasing - "You don't want to do 'Salesman,' do you?" The actor's initial reaction was that it was still too soon. But he was tempted by the idea. And he was encouraged when Miller said he would restore the lines about Willy's smallness, which would become a cornerstone of Hoffman's interpretation.

Hoffman decided to take the leap. He joined Robert Whitehead, Roger L. Stevens and Miller as a co-producer, and will make a minimum salary until the play shows a profit Recently, Hoffman talked about "Salesman" as it related to his own childhood. Despite the disparity in time, place and economic level (the Hoffmans were more financially secure than the Lomans), he felt that there were similarities in the family relationships. His father had worked as a set decorator at Columbia Pictures and then sold furniture. When he was in his 60s, after long years of service, he was suddenly let go by his company. "My father was a successful traveling salesman," said Hoffman, "but I don't think he was successful in his own eyes. In our bouse, we lived in a state of great frictioo."

Andrew Lloyd Webber: Birthday to Remember

Andrew Lloyd Webber, who wrote the music for "Jesus Christ Superstar," "Cats." "Evita" and "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dream Coat," celebrated his 36th birthday in London Thursday by launching his latest musical, "Starlight Express" — and getting married for the second time. The composer was divorced last year. composer was divorced last year. He and his new wife, Sarah Brightman, a former dancer were presented to Queen Elizabeth II at London's Apollo Theater on Thursday night at a preview of the show.

The British yachtsman John Ridgway and his crewmate Andrew Briggs reached Ardmore, Scotland, to a noisy welcome of blaring horns, shotguns and a cannon, and claimed a nonstop round-the-world sailing record of 194 days. Ridgway, 45, who rowed the Atlantic in 1966, and Briggs, 24. made their voyage in the 57-feet (17 meter) ketch English Rose VI, covering about 23,000 miles, measured from Land's End, at the tip of southwest-ern England. This would clip almost 92 days from the time of 285 days 23 hours 57 minutes given in the Guinness Book of Records, set by Pleum Van Der Lugt, a Dutch-man, three years 290 Ridgway and Briggs told the welcoming party that they saw land only three times - at the Canary Islands, Cape Horn and the western isles of Scotland - and met only three ships -Soviet trawlers south of New Zealand

The actress Britt Ekland, 41, divorced from the late actor Peter Sellers in 1969 and later the girlfriend of the rock singer Rod Stewart, has married Jim McDonnell, 23, drummer for the Stray Cats rock band. It's the first marriage for McDonnell.

Jessye Norman, who made her debut at the Metropolitan Opera this season, has filed a $15-million suit in a Manhattan court, charging that unauthorized recordings of her performances throughout the world are being sold in New York. She named Town Records Store and Mr. Tape in court papers, saying Mr. Tape's catalog cootained "the most brazen assemblage of purloined live performances ever stolen from artists."
